

SUMATRA INTERNEES including AANS & QA Military Nurses, a few male military personnel interned as civilians [Padang Group] but not including Dutch nationals.

[compiled by Jonathan Moffatt, Michael Pether, Becca Kenneison]

Introduction:

Four members of the Malayan Volunteers Group are surviving Sumatra internees and others are the children or grandchildren of Sumatra internees. This has generated considerable interest in Sumatra captivity diaries and documents that piece together the story of both groups of Sumatra internees: those interned in the Palembang/Muntok area and those captured at Padang. Many of their names had already come up in Michael Pether and Becca Kenneison's research into the passenger lists of ships sunk in the Banka Straits in February 1942. Others were recorded as aboard captured vessels including the Mata Hari, the Mary Rose and HMS Tapah.

We were aware that although the names of civilians & POWs captured in Singapore were very carefully recorded in documents including the Changi Register and the POW index cards now at National Archives, Kew, the wartime lists of Sumatra internees were extremely inaccurate in both the recording of names and professions. With the list below we hope to put this right.

Our main sources of information appears at the end of the list.

We welcome any additions and corrections that will enhance this list of names.

She had been a staff nurse for some years in Malaya. She was short with funny little sparrow legs and a broad smiling face unless she was in one of her moods> she would do anything in the world for people she liked – in fact she was almost too generous. ...I used to enjoy hearing her talk about her family and about the gold mine and shop they owned in Kuala Lipis. She knew quite a number of Chinese legends. Kong always kept herself very clean and tidy. Her favourite garment was a man's waistcoat which she always wore if it were at all cold or damp. On special occasions she used to put on a spotless baju, also lipstick and a string of really good jade beads. She used to spend hours experimenting with cooking..." finally "...Nurse Kong said that if she got out of camp alive she would become a Christian, this she did , and her little house near Kuala Lumpur is called St Matthews Cottage. She often entertains poor children and gives a big party every year..." Sumatra internee.
